A: You have put your HTML code in double quotation marks, which means that is being interpreted as part of your string, which is not what you want to do. Simply remove the double quotations marks from the output file: sed's/ / /g' output Update: In some cases, you may find special characters (such as ) in your input file, and your sed utility may not be able to work with these. In that case, you can simply replace all the chars with, which is interpreted as a newline character, but is not interpreted as a special character. You can do this by adding -e to the sed command. So, the above sed command will replace each in the input file with. The difference between what my friends call "borderline" and my more common term "probable" schizophrenia would not be the difference between a stranger and a friend. I would see my friends as people with whom I felt a certain rapport, with whom I could carry on regular conversations, and share memories and mundane information in a way I couldn't share with my mother. And I would often find the more withdrawn, guarded friends more distressing and alarming than the more upbeat, even flamboyant ones. One friend I had known since we were 10. He was always the life of the party, and we would have long, light-hearted jokes that helped ease the day's tensions. Then he would get angry and start yelling. A friend from university, who had been hospitalized twice. He had deep scars in his wrist from self-injury, and that would always be visible. When I would meet him, he would be jovial, then turn on me and almost aggressively demand that I drop all my typical trivialities and pay attention, and we would talk for hours. Another friend who was emotionally unbalanced and even assaulted me. When he finished the attack, he would stare at me with a look so vacant and horrific, it was hard to look at him without wanting to take a shower. Another friend who was obsessed with a particular hobby preserving and assembling models of race cars, and gun emplacements from the Civil War. He had schizophrenia. He wrote long, detailed, obsessively thorough emails about the intricacies of one particular set of engines. He lived in
